Think on your feet

Improv comedy can provide fun with friends or family and challenge your tween's creativity. Have a group form a circle. One person steps in the middle and starts acting out a scene, such as a monkey swinging in the jungle. Then, the others join in the acting, perhaps throwing the monkey a banana.

In order
Organizing information in a sequence will give your middle schooler practice with critical thinking—and another way to review material when she studies. She might put historical events in order from least to most important, for example. Or she could plot character development in a book from the most life-changing actions to the least.

Driver-in-training
It's still a few years before your child will be behind the wheel of a car, but it's not too early to start "pre-driver's ed." Point out ways that you drive safely and stay calm in stressful situations. If it's raining, you might say, "I'm driving more slowly because the roads are slick."

Worth quoting
"There is something delicious about writing the first words of a story. You never quite know where they'll take you."—Beatrix Potter

Just for fun
Q: What never asks questions but is often answered?
A: A doorbell.

Motivated from the inside

Danielle joined the swim team because she likes to swim and wants to see what she's capable of. Her motivation comes from within. This intrinsic motivation will help her do her best—not only in swimming but also in whatever she puts her mind to. Help your middle grader develop that kind of motivation with these tips.

Choose wisely
Maybe you hoped your child would try out for the math team, but she wants to be on the student council. She'll be more naturally motivated if you allow her to choose what matters to her. Also, giving her a say in how she pursues her interests will spark her enthusiasm. For instance, let her decide whether to run for office or be a committee member.

Challenge yourself
The more your tween sees her skills improve, the more encouraged she will be to push further. Suggest she ask teachers and coaches what she can do to reach the next level. Her volleyball coach might say she should practice returning serves to become more consistent. Then, she could set a goal for her practice sessions—and aim for more successful returns during games.

Find a purpose
Have your youngster look for reasons why school subjects or after-school activities are relevant to her life. That will make them more appealing and increase her motivation to tackle them. For instance, she might think about careers that interest her and how she would use the information she's learning. Example: A nail salon owner uses math to set prices and order nail polish.

Parents (still) wanted!
Research shows that tweens want to spend more time with their parents, even though they may act the opposite way. Consider these ideas for enjoying time together:

- Look for activities to do side by side. You might try out new recipes in the kitchen, do Sudoku puzzles, or play chess or checkers.
- Build in daily "solo time"—just you and your tween. Perhaps take a nightly walk together after dinner, or go into his room for a chat at bedtime.
- Make a date. Once a month or so, go to a movie, a museum exhibit, or anything else that appeals to the two of you.
Summing things up

Summarizing is a skill your middle schooler needs when taking notes during class, doing reading assignments, and researching papers. Suggest strategies like these.

Read, then tell. Encourage your youngster to tell you about a biography he read by giving you three main facts. Tip: To keep his summary short and to the point, he could jot key words on a sticky note while reading.

Listen, then repeat. Ask him to repeat the important points when you give him directions (like what to do after school if it’s different from his usual routine). That will help him practice listening for crucial details. And it has the added benefit of letting you know he got the message!

Watch, then highlight. Have your child summarize a political debate or sporting event he’s watching on television. He can take notes during the broadcast and then pretend to be a news analyst or sportscaster. His “on the air” updates should highlight the most important happenings of the debate or game.

Activity Corner

Follow the clues

Does your middle grader enjoy reading mysteries or watching detective shows? With this idea, you can set up an imaginary “whodunit” and let your child use real-world forensic science skills to crack the case.

1. Have each family member press her right thumb to a separate glass. Place one of those glasses at the “crime scene.”

2. Lift the fingerprint from that glass by sprinkling on cocoa powder and gently dusting with a brush. Press clear tape to the print, lift, and press onto an index card. Label this, “Evidence.”

3. With a pencil, shade in a square of paper for each family member. Have each person press her right thumb on a square. Use tape to lift the prints, press onto separate index cards, and label each card with the person’s name.

4. Compare the fingerprints to the one left at the scene. Who is the culprit?

No more self-putdowns

Q My daughter used to be so confident. But lately I keep overhearing her put herself down. What should I do?

A It’s normal for kids to become more critical of themselves as they approach the teen years. But there are strategies you can use to keep this from becoming a habit.

First, be sure you’re kind to yourself in front of your daughter. Try to avoid making negative comments about your appearance (“I look fat in this”) or abilities (“I’m not good with numbers”). Instead, let her overhear confident, self-motivating statements, such as “I’m going to have a great workout” or “I know I can figure out this spreadsheet formula.”

Then, ask her to pay attention to how she talks to herself—out loud and in her head. Together, you could come up with “code words” to use if you hear a self-putdown. Examples: “I don’t think so!” or “We need a redo!”

Working with teachers

When my son’s Spanish teacher called to say Carl was disrupting class by talking too much, I was not happy. Mrs. Anderson said she had moved Carl’s seat and made sure he doesn’t sit near his good friends, but she wanted me to be aware of the problem so we could work together.

I thanked her for letting me know and asked how I could help. She suggested that I mention to Carl that we had spoken. Also, she said if things didn’t improve, she would want to meet with both of us.

I told Carl I was disappointed to get the call. And I made sure he knew he was being disrespectful to both his teacher and his classmates. Carl knows that I’m going to follow up with Mrs. Anderson—and I’m hoping that our teamwork will encourage him to stop interrupting in class.
Dealing with cyberbullying

The digital world has opened up a whole new realm for bullying. Help your middle grader stay safe with this advice.

1. Explain that what may seem like common online behavior can be cyberbullying. If friends post or share embarrassing photos or videos of others, classmates spread rumors on cell phones, or peers send hurtful messages via social media, that's crossing a line. If done purposely and repeatedly, it's considered cyberbullying.

2. Point out that what happens online may have serious, real-life consequences. A humiliating photo gone viral could cause the victim to stay away from friends or hurt himself. And the bully can get into trouble at home, at school, or even with the law.

3. Go over rules. Your middle grader should avoid doing or saying anything online that he wouldn't do or say in person. Encourage him to think about how someone might feel before he texts or posts.

4. Tell your tween not to respond to a bully. It may make the situation worse. Have him save, print, or take a screen shot of the post to keep a record of what happened. Then, he should block the sender and tell you what happened so you can decide what to do, such as notifying your Internet service provider or the school.

Writing for pleasure

Q My daughter used to enjoy writing, but now she sees writing assignments as a chore. How can I help her find the joy in it again?

A Your child might rediscover her enjoyment by doing creative writing activities that don’t have grades attached.

For example, suggest that she write and decorate an inspiring poem to put inside her locker. Or she could make up funny captions for photos and share them with family.

She can even write with friends by having a paper “snowball fight.” One person writes an opening sentence of a story on a piece of paper, crumples it, and tosses it to another player. That person adds a sentence, re-crumples the paper, and tosses it again. Keep writing, crumpling, and tossing until the page is full. Then, read the story aloud.

Writing for fun may take the pressure off and unleash her imagination. And that can help her loosen up and enjoy written assignments in school more.

Fit in fitness

With school in full swing, your child probably has many demands on her time, and she may not be thinking about staying fit. Here are easy ways to add activity into her day.

Start a 60/30 challenge. Doing 60 minutes of activity a day for 30 days might kick-start a fitness habit. The hour can be spread throughout the day (30-minute dance class + 10-minute walk to a friend's house + 20-minute bike ride after dinner). Have her record her totals.

Make a “random activities” pile. Your tween could brainstorm exercises to do for 1-2 minutes, such as squats, push-ups, or sit-ups. She can write them on index cards and leave the cards by her desk and the TV. During homework breaks and commercials, she should draw one and do what it says. She might note on the back how many she completed and try for more next time.

Work your way to success

My son Blake was surprised and disappointed when he auditioned for seventh-grade band and wasn't placed in the highest level. Until then, he had done well at whatever he tried. He wasn't prepared to handle it when something didn't come easily.

I explained that it was okay to struggle—and in fact, it was a normal part of life. I shared stories of times I've had to work to get better. In my first job, I told him, I messed up a few customers' orders, so the manager had to review the steps with me for a week.

I encouraged Blake to see his trumpet playing as a work in progress. He brainstormed ways he could improve a little at a time.

I explained that it was okay to struggle—and in fact, it was a normal part of life. I shared stories of times I've had to work to get better. In my first job, I told him, I messed up a few customers' orders, so the manager had to review the steps with me for a week.

I encouraged Blake to see his trumpet playing as a work in progress. He brainstormed ways he could improve a little at a time.

Then, he taped a note to his music stand that says, "Aim for progress, not perfection." He has been practicing extra each day, working on the parts that give him trouble—and on his perseverance.